Here One Moment

Liane Moriarty

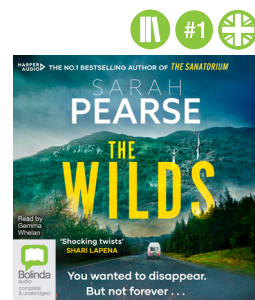

On an ordinary, short domestic flight, something extraordinary happens. People learn how and when they are going to die. How do they know this? There were ostensibly more interesting people on the flight (the bride and groom, the jittery, possibly famous woman, the giant Hemsworth-esque guy who looks like an off-duty superhero, the frazzled, gorgeous flight attendant) but none would become as famous as 'The Death Lady'.

Not a single passenger or crew member will later recall noticing her board the plane. But what she did on that flight was truly remarkable.

A few months later, one passenger dies exactly as she predicted. Then two more passengers die, again, as she said they would. Soon no one is thinking this is simply an entertaining story at a cocktail party.

If you were told you only had a certain amount of time left to live, would you do things differently? Would you try to dodge your destiny?

The Bedroom Window

K.L. Slater

My darling little boy Albie adores playing at our new neighbours' house. And after the terrible year we've had, I feel so lucky that we can start over in this perfect place, with new friends who treat Albie like the son they never had. He can't stop talking about the tree house they're building him, and the cookies they bake together.

But as time passes, something starts to feel wrong. Why don't they ever open the front door more than a crack? They told me they had no children, so who does the small pink tricycle I saw in their hall belong to?

Then, one night, I see a small shadowy figure in their bedroom window ...

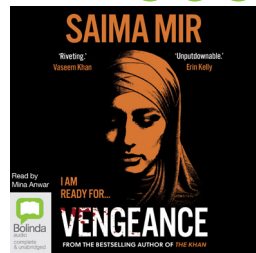

I thought I'd learned my lesson about trusting the wrong people, but now I'm forced to wonder what this perfect couple are hiding.

And if I try to save that little helpless figure in the window, will I do what I've always feared most, and put my beautiful boy's life in danger ...?
